JUNIPER SALON · PROTOTYPE REVIEW

Filling last-minute openings without the back-and-forth

What happens today

- You or Carla spot the cancellation in Square, scan the Google Sheet, and text several people at once.
- It's hard to track who replied and who's next, so openings sometimes stay empty.
- Two clients have both thought they got the same spot, and one left upset.

What you told me matters most

- Never promise one opening to two people.
- Keep it moving without anyone babysitting it.
- Warm and calm for clients; they only ever see their own offer.

5/10+ your goal, hands-off

HOW THE PROTOTYPE WORKS

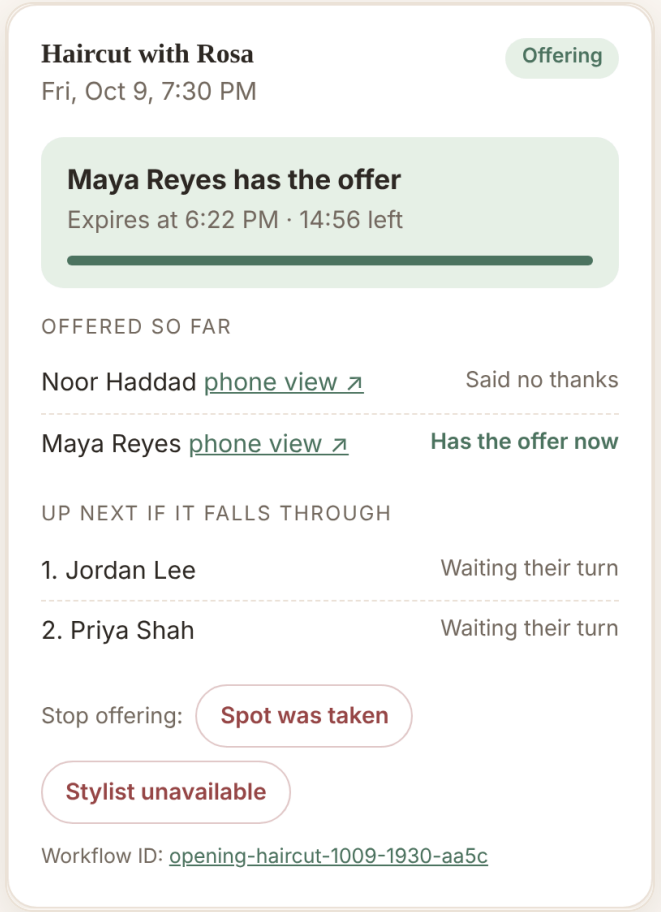

One offer at a time, and it moves on by itself

1 · ADD THE OPENING
Staff enter the cancelled slot: service, stylist, time.

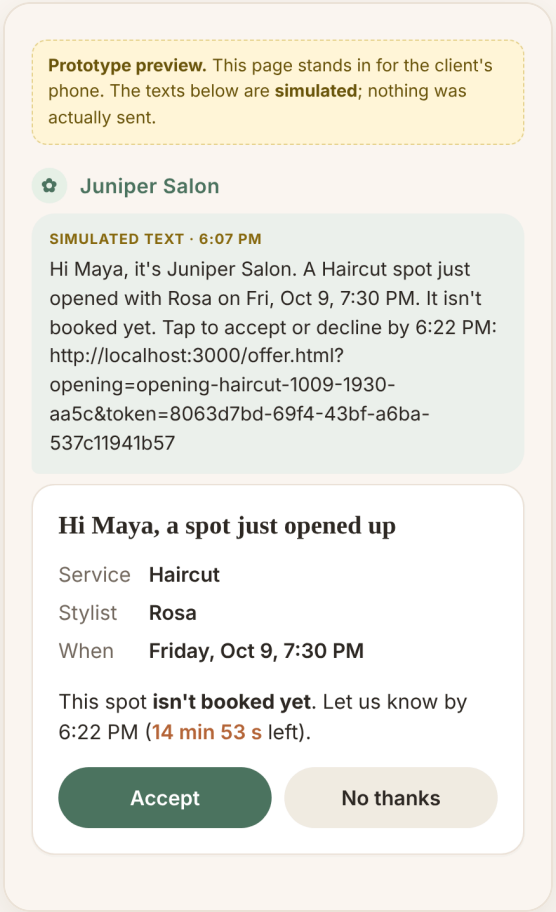

2 · MATCH
Right service, can make that time, stylist preference fits. Earliest on the waitlist goes first.

3 · OFFER TO ONE PERSON
They get a text with Accept / No thanks and 15 minutes to reply.

4 · OUTCOME
Yes: confirmed, front desk told, you add it to Square.
No thanks or no reply: straight to the next person.

Staff see who has it, when it expires, who's next

Client sees only their own offer simulated text

BUILT FOR THE THINGS THAT GO WRONG

The situations you described, handled

- Two people say yes: impossible. Only the person holding the offer can accept, and replies are handled one at a time.
- A "yes" after the 15 minutes: a clear, polite "this spot is no longer available"; they can't claim it.
- "Not this time": applies to that opening only. They stay on the waitlist.
- Walk-in takes it, or the stylist can't: staff tap one button, offering stops, and nobody else can claim it.
- Nobody accepts: shows "Not filled" and why (declined / no reply), then stops texting.
- Computer restarts or internet drops: the offer and its deadline are still there and it picks up where it left off. That's what Temporal, the engine underneath, is for.

BEING CLEAR ABOUT THE PROTOTYPE

Working for real

- The one-at-a-time offer process and 15-minute deadlines
- Staff view and stop buttons
- Client accept / decline page
- Picking up after a restart

Simulated labeled

- Text messages: shown on screen, never sent
- Front-desk notice
- The waitlist: sample clients standing in for your Google Sheet

Left out on purpose

- Square: you keep entering bookings yourselves
- Staff login
- Updating the sheet after a booking
- Hosting online; it runs on one computer for now

PRACTICAL NEXT STEP

A two-week pilot on real cancellations

1

Connect the real pieces

Send real texts through a texting service, and read the waitlist straight from your Google Sheet. Square stays as it is.

2

Run it alongside you

You and Carla use it for every last-minute cancellation for two weeks, with the 15-minute window.

3

Measure against your goal

Count openings refilled (today ~3 in 10, goal 5+), time spent texting, and any client complaints.

To start, I'd need from you: a copy of the waitlist sheet's columns, which number clients should get texts from, and 15 minutes with Carla to walk through the staff screen.
